HONEST ABE, U. S. M.

The Rural Letter Carrier Can't Let Go of Poetry.

"Abe," savs the postmaster to me before I started out on my route the other morning, "why don't you let go Do you mean singing hymns as ride through the country?"

"No. I mean writing poetry for the farmers.

"I've tried to let go, but I can't." "The other carriers are jealous."

"I'm sorry."

"And the postmaster general doesn't seem to like it."

"I don't want to break the rules, but the people on my route will have poetry or bust the delivery. They have become one and inseparable."

"Well, do as little of it as you can. We don't want any one at Washington to think you are trying to crowd

We don't want any one at Washington to think you are trying to crowd him out of his place. As for the other carriers, if they were not born poets it is not your fault, but don't push things far enough to get up a strike among them."

The above remarks of the postmaster injured my feelings, and I solemnly determined not to write another line of poetry for any one. An hour later I had changed my mind. On driving up to Farmer Sempstead's gate there stood his wife, wiping away her tears on her checked apron, and when I asked the cause of her grief when I asked the cause of her grief

she queried:
"Abe, are you a friend of this family?"

"To the death."
"And do you know what's happened since you were along here?"
"Nothing bad, I hope."
"Our little Sammy's dead!"

"You don't say!"
"And you must come in while I tell you more about it, and then you must write me some verses. I've got to have 'em or break my heart. I've been standing out here more than two hours waiting for you."

I couldn't resist the appeal. I went in and sat down at the kitchen table. and, after a few minutes' talk, I turned to and wrote as follows:

Just two years old, our Sammy was, Scarce high as father's knee; His laughter rang from morn till night-His days were full of glee.

One midnight, as the house was still, There came a wild alarm; And death he stood there with a smile And stretch-ed forth his arm.

And can't be kept to bounds.

night, as Sammy cuddled up, All full of con-fi-dence;
Three hundred pounds rolled over him
And crushed him into whence.

His bulky ma can ne'er forgive Herself for what she did; And never will she cease to weep Till higher up she's bid.

three minutes before she could could be a co goes right to the heart, and if the postmaster general gets jealous of you and tries to bounce you out we will all turn in and make it hot for him.

THE GOOD WOMAN LAID HER BOBBED! THE TABLE AND

I left her reading the verses over and drying her tears, and the fact that the sun shines again for her made me light-hearted as I continued my way.
This is a world in which each individual should strive to do some littie good. If he hasn't the money to buy houses and lots for deserving widows he can at least write a few verses of poetry for grieving mothers. Farmer Joe Taylor had never cottoned to my poetry. Nothing had hap-pened to him calling for any, and on several occasions he had spoken sar-castically of verses written for others.

LITTLE BOYS' OVERCOAT.

A pretty overcoat could be made from this design by using sand-color French broadcloth, with black velvet collar and cuffs. The material is laid in two box-plaits front and back; then the yoke is applied over the plaits and the material is cut away beneath. The closing is made at the right side, near the box plait, which gives it the double-breasted effect. Two rows of buttons are used down the front. The sleeves are made bishop style, and have turn-back cuffs of black velvet.

I had kept quiet and bided my time, knowing that the date would come when he would need me. He sat on the horse-block as I drove up on this occasion, and I knew before he had said a word that he was my meat. "Abe," he began, as he rose up, "did I ever tell you that I had a brother Sam out West?"

"No; you never did."
"Well, I did have, but have no longer. He's dead."
"Too bad."

"And if you could—could come in and write—write us a little poetry about it we'd be obleeged all our lives

The good woman laid her head down on the table and sobbed as I read the above to her, and it was three minutes before she could control the voice to say:

"But I thought you poetry?"

"Don't hold that over me now, Abe. This is a stricken family and no time to remember that I've said what I shouldn't."

I went in and met the weeping

Joe Taylor had a brother and the brother's name was Sam, And Samuel he resided in the west; A farmer in Dacota, and his pumpkins took the prize. And with a growing fam'ly he was

Joe Taylor's brother Sam to the meadow went to mow—
To the meadow that was lying all so green;

He had a team of horses that were very full of frisk.

And he never orter hitched them to the mowing old machine.

The team had scarce been driv around that meadow green, When the frisky horses frisked and ran away; And Joe Taylor's brother Sam took a header for the earth.

And his neck was neatly broken like an image made of clay. They bore him to his farmhouse and for the doctor rode, But, alas; his life on earth had met its close; No more he'd seek the meadow, or drive a frisky team— No more he'd battle bravely against life's many woes.

We sorrow with his widow-we pity children five. Our grief it won't subside for many

And is now a-taking comfort in many, many ways, "Joe, may I kiss Abe for them verses?" asked Mrs. Taylor of her husband, as I finished reading them.

"You bet you can, and if that hain't enough I'll kiss him myself!" was the again poetry from this time on has got to be bigger'n a house to escape a licking from me!"

I got caught once more that day. s I got along to Farmer Snyder's the wife beckoned me from the steps, and when I descended from the cart approached she whispered to me that her daughter Sally might not live unless she could get some of my poetry to send her beau. I tell the story as it was told me;

My love lies on a bed of pain, my love lies a-moaning.

My love was kicked by spotted cow all in the summer gloaming.

My love he asks for me in vain-he calls: "O, where is Sally?"
Why don't she sit beside me here and help me for to rally?

"Why don't she give me chicken broth—why don't she jeilies feed? Why don't she smooth my marble brow—oh, why don't Sally heed?"

I'll tell you why, my darling Tom, I'll tell you why I linger—
I'll tell you why I'm here at home, while duty points her finger.

I climbed an apple tree, my love, to sit and med-l-tate— The limb broke, and down I came the thud I got was great.

In bed I am, as you are, lovewith bruises sore, But this will pass and we will meet to never part no more. (Copyrighted, 1907, by P. E. East

CONTEST AT Y. M. C. A.

Second of the Series Takes Place Las Evening.

The second of the series of Wednesday evening contests was held at the Central Young Men's Christian association gym-nasium last night. The interest in these contests is growing weekly, both from contests is growing weekly, both from

The first event was a volley ball game between the Business Men and Senior A classes, in which the Business Men so ut terly routed the younger fellows that when the smoke had cleared away it was found they had 21 scalps to the Senior A.

Following this interclass competition was the running high jump. There were nine contestants, two of whom succeeded in breaking last year's record for the department. The event finally went to W. H. Thayer, who cleared the stick at 5 ft.

The group contests were next and the events were potato race, 2 lap relay and 2 basket ball games. To have 2 relay races, going at once, one on the track and one on the floor, was a new experience to the audience and next to a four ring circus is about the hardest thing to watch imaginable. Needless to say it was extremely interesting. Teams 1 and 2 won both the potato race and 2 lap relay and then to "prove it," won the basket ball games. This boosted their scores 2 points each. games. This boosted their search each.
